Introduction

This Insights Discovery profile is based on Wen-Szu Lin's responses to the Insights Preference Evaluator which was completed on 10 March 2021.

The origins of personality theory can be traced back to the fifth century BC, when Hippocrates identified four distinct energies exhibited by different people. The Insights System is built around the model of personality first identified by the Swiss psychologist Carl Gustav Jung. This model was published in his 1921 work "Psychological Types" and developed in subsequent writings. Jung's work on personality and preferences has since been adopted as the seminal work in understanding personality and has been the subject of study for thousands of researchers to the present day.

Using Jung's typology, this Insights Discovery profile offers a framework for self-understanding and development. Research suggests that a good understanding of self, both strengths and weaknesses, enables individuals to develop effective strategies for interaction and can help them to better respond to the demands of their environment.

Generated from several hundred thousand permutations of statements, this profile is unique. It reports statements which your Evaluator responses indicate may apply to you. Modify or delete any statement which does not apply, but only after checking with colleagues or friends to identify whether the statement may be a "blind spot" for you.

Use this profile pro-actively. That is, identify the key areas in which you can develop and take action. Share the important aspects with friends and colleagues. Ask for feedback from them on areas which seem particularly relevant for you and develop an action plan for growth personally and interpersonally.

Overview

These statements provide a broad understanding of Wen-Szu's work style. Use this section to gain a better understanding of his approaches to his activities, relationships and decisions.

Personal Style

Wen-Szu is adaptable, easy-going, warm, friendly and generous. He exhibits personal warmth, insight, originality and a broad organisational ability. He wants to be indispensable to others and his desire to please is so strong that he can sometimes lose his own identity by ignoring his own needs. He enjoys socialising, but likes to plan his entertaining for maximum effect. In everyday activities, Wen-Szu is tolerant, open-minded, flexible and adaptable, enjoying the present moment.

He will be hurt if people ignore him and likes to be remembered and appreciated for the services he continually seeks to offer to others. At times, events can overwhelm him and he may find it almost impossible to say “No”, even when the demands are unreasonable. He is proficient at alleviating the concerns of others. Wen-Szu displays fierce loyalty to and for people who report to him. He is warm and gracious and believes in a philosophy of “live and let live”.

Theoretical work holds little interest for him and he needs to feel he is doing something rather than just thinking about it. If his job requires that he work alone for long periods then he can become restless and unsettled, unless the job is really engaging. He gravitates to other people and is highly skilled at understanding others' needs and motivations, usually appearing friendly, tactful and sympathetic. He may have specific goals and abilities relating to personal values. He gains comfort from knowing that he has others' support and agreement.

He tends to be disinterested in subjects for which he sees no practical application. He is aware of and involved in his physical environment and likes to be active and productive. He is comfortable letting others manage the more technical aspects of a project so he can devote his full energies to creating a co-operative, comfortable environment. He tends to have an interest in the new and unusual and is gifted at expressing his feelings. If his efforts are not recognised, or approval is withheld, he may feel deflated as his feeling of worth can depend on how others regard him.

He can be relied upon to keep a check on the social calendar, though he may well overlook some of the smaller details in preparing for events. Wen-Szu should try to stand back occasionally and look at himself and at his work more objectively. He enjoys helping other people but prefers to assist in real and tangible ways. Wen-Szu is a natural trainer, facilitator, educator and counsellor. He is prepared to attempt almost anything, but his work needs to be active rather than theoretical.

Interacting with Others

Wen-Szu values harmony. He is essentially a peace keeper and is very sensitive to others' needs. Compassion, caring, warmth and contented relationships are important to him. He will go to great lengths to promote fellowship and avoid conflict. He is at his best in co-operative roles that deal with people and allow him to air his views. Empathetic and compassionate, he has a strong need to contribute to the welfare of others.

He prefers to be active and working with like minded people. Relationships are extremely important in his life and he may feel that psychological wellbeing depends on the inclusion of others. Wen-Szu has the ability to motivate others and will pitch in at all levels, while regularly finding time to listen to others' needs. Wen-Szu tends to be very sensitive to the way he relates to others and is at his best in situations which run smoothly and harmoniously. He tends to avoid conflict rather than engage it with creative solutions.

With a joy for living that is contagious, Wen-Szu moves to seek the company of others whenever he can. He prefers democratic and participative processes rather than written instructions or autocratic systems. He can be unbelieving of, and devastated by, too much personal criticism. Unpleasant working relationships can lead him to lose confidence and motivation. He may find himself automatically adapting his own personality in an attempt to meet other peoples' ideas of what is desirable. He sometimes appears as rather soft-hearted and sentimental, he will usually recall birthdays and anniversaries when others forget.

Decision Making

Wen-Szu will usually encourage democratic or even consensus decisions, as opposed to having them imposed autocratically. He prefers tasks or projects which allow flexibility of scheduling. Because he values harmony and agreement, he believes the best way to maintain this is to persuade others of the validity of his viewpoint. He makes decisions relying on his personal experiences to see him through. He may have so many ideas on the go that he has difficulty in making up his mind on the best course of action.

Wen-Szu creates a pleasant, flexible and accepting environment and will regard an emergency situation as an opportunity to display his helping gifts. In his attempts to please others he may make promises he cannot fulfil. Trying to focus more on the facts, not just on the people, can be helpful in his decision making. People occasionally see Wen-Szu making decisions that appear to fly in the face of logic. He may value opinions over facts in considering a possible course of action.

He is flexible in modifying conclusions already reached, so long as no one is compromised by the changes. Wen-Szu is an excellent "sounding board" for others who are seeking to explore their own ideas. He may find it difficult to make decisions based purely on objective considerations. He recognises judgements that rely heavily on logical analysis, but then may ignore this in making his decisions. He prefers moderate to slight risk in decision-making.

 - Sees the positive in every situation.
 - Trusting and tolerant of others' actions.

Personal Notes

Key Strengths & Weaknesses

Possible Weaknesses

Jung said “wisdom accepts that all things have two sides”. It has also been said that a weakness is simply an overused strength. Wen-Szu's responses to the Evaluator have suggested these areas as possible weaknesses.

Wen-Szu's possible weaknesses:

- Often fails to delegate, or delegates too little.
 - May not deliver on time.
 - Will tend to be influenced by the last person he speaks to.
 - Overly concerned with the opinions of others.
 - Feels victimised or targeted.
 - May unwillingly sacrifice his own needs for others.
 - Over-compliant and easily led.
 - Over-tolerant of others' inability to perform.
 - Answers the question before it has been asked.
 - Generally speaking, he is speaking generally!

Personal Notes

Value to the Team

Each person brings a unique set of gifts, attributes and expectations to the environment in which they operate. Add to this list any other experiences, skills or other attributes which Wen-Szu brings, and make the most important items on the list available to other team members.

As a team member, Wen-Szu:

- Brings fun and light-heartedness to any environment with which he is familiar.
 - Makes friends quickly and easily.
 - Makes great effort to build and maintain relationships with others.
 - Bolsters and promotes team spirit.
 - Will be conscious of the human factors in the organisation and the team.
 - Has strong personal and interpersonal skills.
 - Mediates to bring harmony from conflict.
 - Will be sympathetic to others needs.
 - Is seen as a good team builder.
 - Likes and is liked by most others.

Personal Notes

Communication

Effective Communications

Communication can only be effective if it is received and understood by the recipient. For each person certain communication strategies are more effective than others. This section identifies some of the key strategies which will lead to effective communication with Wen-Szu. Identify the most important statements and make them available to colleagues.

Strategies for communicating with Wen-Szu:

- Provide information that stimulates conversation.
 - Use a casual, informal style of conversation.
 - Agree exactly what needs to be done.
 - Provide lots of opportunities for team contact.
 - Avoid detailed reports, focus on people issues.
 - Leave time to ensure he is comfortable on personal issues.
 - Show appreciation of his role in the organisation.
 - Don't be too serious, dull or severe.
 - Talk about him and areas he finds stimulating.
 - Allow him time to talk it over with those who may be affected.
 - Avoid unnecessary distractions - keep to the point.
 - Be prepared to discuss a wide range of topics.

Personal Notes

Communication

Barriers to Effective Communication

Certain strategies will be less effective when communicating with Wen-Szu. Some of the things to be avoided are listed below. This information can be used to develop powerful, effective and mutually acceptable communication strategies.

When communicating with Wen-Szu, DO NOT:

- Judge, criticise or embarrass him in public.
 - Adopt an intransigent, judgmental stance.
 - Overload with any theoretical demands.
 - Emphasise established processes.
 - Be brusque, overbearing or harness him to unrealistic deadlines.
 - Smother his efforts to explore alternatives.
 - Fail to meet informally to discuss progress.
 - Create a hostile environment devoid of feelings.
 - Prolong disciplinary or instructional meetings.
 - Leave him out of the picture.
 - Expect him to respond favourably if you dictate to him on policy or procedures.
 - Expect to maintain his interest if you only focus on the task.

Personal Notes

Possible Blind Spots

Our perceptions of self may be different to the perceptions others have of us. We project who we are onto the outside world through our “persona” and are not always aware of the effect our less conscious behaviours have on others. These less conscious behaviours are termed “Blind Spots”. Highlight the important statements in this section of which you are unaware and test them for validity by asking for feedback from friends or colleagues.

Wen-Szu's possible Blind Spots:

Occasionally Wen-Szu may miss opportunities through a lack of awareness of the need to conclude the planning detail. He values established institutions and tends to enjoy an active and co-operative membership in committees and organisations. He is not always sure he is participating for the right reason. He often overlooks his own needs due to his desire to please or help other people.

Wen-Szu is so emotionally entangled in his projects that he is very sensitive to negative criticism of his work. When he is disappointed, he may become negative about everything and everyone around him. He is perceived by others as a natural helper and needs to feel appreciated. He may be so concerned about the feelings of others that he can be blind to important facts when the situation involves hurt feelings. He values friends and may tend to filter only their positive attributes.

Wen-Szu may become so engrossed with his own projects that other important tasks lie forgotten. Trying to be less sensitive would enable Wen-Szu to hear the often helpful information that is contained in constructive criticism. His interest in others tends to make him rather optimistic towards maintaining positive relationships. He needs to learn to deal more directly and honestly with conflict, trusting that his natural sensitivity to others' feelings will provide him with what needs to be done even in the most difficult situations. People can see that he doesn't always take a rational or objective view of the world.

Personal Notes

Opposite Type

The description in this section is based on Wen-Szu's opposite type on the Insights Wheel. Often, we have most difficulty understanding and interacting with those whose preferences are different to our own. Recognising these characteristics can help in developing strategies for personal growth and enhanced interpersonal effectiveness.

Recognising your Opposite Type:

Wen-Szu's opposite Insights type is the Reformer, Jung's "Thinking" type.

Reformers are creative and abstract thinkers. They have a competitive drive for results, which is balanced by a restraining need for everything to be perfect for them. They have difficulty maintaining a positive, non-judgmental approach, which can make their performance erratic. They tend to be indecisive, and can become upset when found to be wrong. Reformers will tend to canvass support for their ideas long after a different decision has been made and accepted by others.

Wen-Szu may see Reformers as reserved and cold. Reformers may become authoritarian when their hard work is not recognised. Often blunt, Wen-Szu may see their egocentricity as overbearing. Reformers often rely on intimidation and the threat of retribution as a way of seeing it is their justice that is done. Lacking poise, they may appear to be unconcerned with the needs of others. Reformers will not readily take the blame for a project that goes off the rails.

Reformers have a sense of precision and can pay attention to detail. Prone to display their anger, they have strong opinions and may become upset if others simply do not follow their lead. Wen-Szu will often see the Reformer as both aloof and argumentative.

Opposite Type

Communication with Wen-Szu's Opposite Type

Written specifically for Wen-Szu, this section suggests some strategies he could use for effective interaction with someone who is his opposite type on the Insights Wheel.

Wen-Szu Lin: How you can meet the needs of your Opposite Type:

- Ask for his advice.
- Take things one step at a time.
- Agree stretching goals and targets.
- Be practical, realistic and direct.
- Expect him to come back later for clarification.
- Act in an adult and mature way.

Wen-Szu Lin: When dealing with your opposite type DO NOT:

- Procrastinate, prevaricate or interrupt him.
- Waffle.
- Try to manipulate him towards your viewpoint.
- Withhold vital information.
- Undermine his authority.
- Pretend that you know more than you do.

Personal Notes

Suggestions for Development

Insights Discovery does not offer direct measures of skill, intelligence, education or training. However, listed below are some suggestions for Wen-Szu's development. Identify the most important areas which have not yet been addressed. These can then be incorporated into a personal development plan.

Wen-Szu may benefit from:

- Dealing directly with conflict rather than worrying unnecessarily about finding alternatives that will appease all parties.
 - Not expecting others to always share his optimistic stance.
 - Responding to logic even if someone is likely to get hurt in the process.
 - Taking life more seriously.
 - Paying meticulous attention to detail before leaping to a conclusion.
 - Maintaining a more objective view of others and their motives.
 - Adopting a no-nonsense approach.
 - Reflecting on what it is that he really wants.
 - Confronting his feelings of anger and dealing with the problem.
 - Saying “no” when too much is expected of him.

Personal Notes

Management

Creating the Ideal Environment

People are generally most effective when provided with an environment which suits their preferences and style. It can be uncomfortable to work in an environment which does not. This section should be used to ensure a close match between Wen-Szu's ideal environment and his current one and to identify any possible frustrations.

Wen-Szu's Ideal Environment is one in which:

- Mundane and repetitive work is minimised.
 - There is space for plenty of holiday/leisure time.
 - The emphasis is on informality and tapping in to inner creativity.
 - There are few “heavy” interruptions to dampen the atmosphere.
 - There are social activities outside of work.
 - He has opportunities to reinforce one-to-one relationships.
 - He is kept busy on a variety of tasks.
 - “Brainstorming” sessions are a regular event.
 - There is a wide variety of differing tasks and challenges, with teams fully supported.
 - Information is openly and freely available and exchanged.

Management

Managing Wen-Szu

This section identifies some of the most important strategies in managing Wen-Szu. Some of these needs can be met by Wen-Szu himself and some may be met by his colleagues or management. Go through this list to identify the most important current needs, and use it to build a personal management plan.

Wen-Szu needs:

- The opportunity of networking during his working day.
 - Regular reminding of the business demands.
 - Steady, firm, overall guidance.
 - Regular feedback and genuine encouragement.
 - Regular reassurance of the value placed on his contribution.
 - A manager who values his feelings.
 - An understanding manager, who is mentor and coach, and who is consistent, patient and calm.
 - Practical follow-through and a support structure to handle the completion of projects.
 - A “walkabout” manager whose presence is obvious.
 - Some help in resolving conflict and discipline issues.

Management

Motivating Wen-Szu

It has often been said that it is not possible to motivate anyone - only to provide the environment in which they will motivate themselves. Here are some suggestions which can help to provide motivation for Wen-Szu. With his agreement, build the most important ones into his Performance Management System and Key Result Areas for maximum motivation.

Wen-Szu is motivated by:

- Knowing he has the approval of others.
 - Special task “teams” to interact with.
 - Rewards that reflect his immediate needs.
 - Personal appreciation and public recognition for a job well done.
 - Tasks which predominantly involve the group.
 - Opportunities to share experiences with a small, relaxed group of colleagues.
 - Team activities to lighten the gloom.
 - Occasional appreciative comments.
 - Investment in equipment for his exclusive use that encourages his sense of worth.
 - Being made to feel “one of us”.

Personal Notes

Management Style

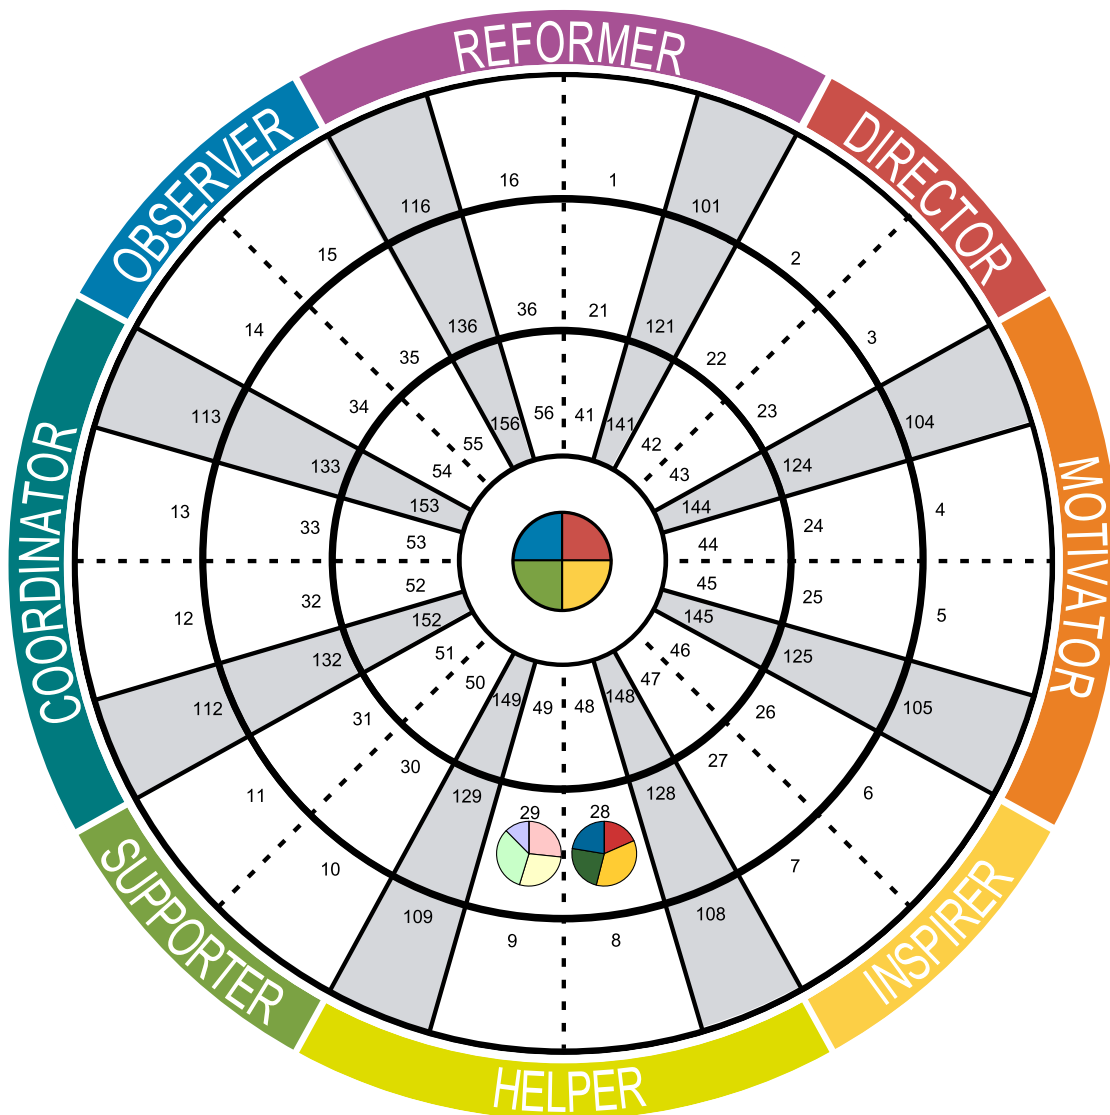

There are many different approaches to management, most of which have different situational applications. This section identifies Wen-Szu's natural management approach and offers clues to his management style, highlighting both gifts and possible hindrances that can be further explored.

In managing others, Wen-Szu may tend to:

- Not adhere rigidly to time deadlines or restrictions.
 - Surprise others with his accurate predictions of reactions to decisions.
 - Be highly trusting of his team.
 - Show great pride in, and demand recognition for, his team.
 - Sublimate his own needs for those of others.
 - Manage democratically, whilst attempting to appease those who do not agree.
 - Give team members plenty of freedom.
 - Be seen as friendly, practical and realistic.
 - Allow team members with a stronger personality to “rule the roost”.
 - Be too trusting of his people.
